Fiona,

Remember sitting on that bench after fro-yo? It was my dream then that I might be writing this card to you. The past 6 months have been wonderful; I'm not sure I could dream of anything nicer. Not a day has gone by that I didn't wake up grateful to be with you, and go to bed humbled, that I have this time with you. All the previous years seem like a flash, just waiting for you. In a hundred thousand ways, I love being with you.

A part of me never thought I would be lucky enough to be with someone so smart, caring, beautiful, hardworking, and easy to love. I'm not sure gloves could fit as well as you do into my life. You make every day feel like I won the lottery. I feel myself around you and wish I could give you more than you give me. I know everything written here sounds over the top, but I hope deep down, you know it's true.

While I know that so far it has felt like only the good stuff, I also know that, ultimately, loving someone always asks something of us. I'm not so beguiled as to think there won't ever be times it will feel like paddling upstream. I am happy that the only upstream paddling we have done so far has been blissful. But, even if that's not always the case, I hope we can hold hands through it all. I know that good things take time, and life doesn't happen on our schedule, so while we wait for that, I hope you know that you have my all. From morning to night, and from night to morning. Thanks for being on the adventure with me. I'm excited for all the adventures yet to come.

Happy 6 months.

Yours,

Stephen

P.S.

I couldn't get a gift certificate online, but you can count this card good for: A couple's night out pottery spin class from Cream City Clay (<https://www.creamcityclay.com/classes-workshops/adult-classes/#couplesnightout>)
